PERHAPS the greatest of all nuisances in the Straits Government may decide upon connection with the Chinese colonists in the adopting against the Secret Societies, how-Straits Settlements is to be found in the existence among them of the Secret Societies. Numerous complaints have, from time to sources of danger and disquietude. time, appeared in the columns of the Press respecting their conduct, and it seems, according to Major DUNLOP'S last Police Report, that they are as active and trouble- resumed yesterday, and after evidence similar some as ever. In Penang the Superinten, to that already published, it was adjourned for came up again he would recommend him to be dent of Police states that most of the crimes arise out of the Secret Societies. The Hoeys are, he says, growing more nowerful every community. They are a refuge for the comber in consequence of a quarrel between O. A. Ozorio, Esq. the two rival Hoeys. In Singapore, Secret Societies have been kept more in speck, and outwardly give but little troubles but sadds envaged in a frolic which bad the double effect cake of bringing a false charge against two old and had it not been for the exertions of a party Major Duntor significantly, should dis, of frightening some ladice and of debarring women, content arise amongst the Chinese populit seems they went for a ramble up the Peak, lation these Hoeys will assuredly prove after having, apparently, had rather more to of creat trouble and danger l to the Settlement." tions and notices issued by private chops or persons should be submitted to and stamped by him before being published, under a ponalty. The Straits Government would thus. it is thought, be able to obtain an amount of valuable information for the purpose of either amending past or enacting future legislation. The Singapore Times is of opinion that this proposal would be cumbrous and expensive, while it would prove noperative because the Chinese would not go to be registered. Our contemporary British barque Wallace, Sken, from Cardiff to believes that the Secret Societies cannot be suppressed, and that, as the sole object to be obtained is the preservation of order, had a boat put out to endeavour therewith to this could be best and most inexpensively keep the vessel away from the shore, but secured by making the Chinese self-governing in that direction. At length the captain decided dividing thempinto wards and appointing to preserve the ship if possible, by casting responsible be idmen, with a captain over all. The Times evidently does not quite under- was smid the surf, and she soon disappeared in stand the Chinese unture. Had there been a | deep water without leaving a trace behind Tung Wah Hospital Committee in Singapore it would scarcely have advocated the establishment of an imperium in imperio-for that is what its proposed would amount to in the Colony. The abuses of power of which the hope that these services will be noknowledged headmen would be guilty can be safely predicted. The Chinese population would be systematically and mercilessly squeezed-by them. Meanwhile the Secret Societies would flourish like green bay trees, and dictate to the headmen in all matters. This remed would undoubtedly, we think, prove worse than the disease, and a very brief trial of it would suffice to convince our Singapore contempolary of the fact. - Its correspondent "Lex" Kas, however, hit-upon a sensible scheme. He is sanguine that the Secret Societies can be suppressed, if the Straits Government only makes up its mind to do it. Without feeling quite so convinced of this fact-for i must be admitted that the suppression_of any secret society is a most difficult matterwe are ready to believe that their evil influence might be neutralised by the plan suggested September, passed through the Ly-ee-moon by "Lox." His idea is for the Government to form a Chinese secret service on which Europeans should be employed, and should voyage to Sui Kung, and about eleven o'clock, send in their reports, which ought not to be while sailing eastward, and near Lampai, published, direct to the Governor. "The duties of these officials would," he continues, "require the most delicate tact, great industry." and watchfulness, some of the qualities that go to make up an ambassador, and all that possible to a strong and vigorous Government. It is, too, a matter of great if not vital importance in the Straits Settlements, where the Chinese constitute so large and important a section of the population. Secret Societies have baffled all efforts of the also been taken from the trading lank, and Government to put them down, and still mantity of fire arms and ammuniton. On the flourish and plot, to the disturbance of the pirate junk-were also found some uniform-Authorities and the unessiness of the people. The Chinese naturally love mystery, and swords hence the Secret Societies have a peculiar fascination for the wild spirits among them. The Societies always have some mischief on hand. If a Society is not engaged in plotting against the Government, it employs itself in maturing a scheme against foreigners, or a plan by which to terrorise the peaceable inhabitants of a chosen district.

The efforts made by the Chinese Government to suppress the Secret Societies have always been more or less spasmodic, while in-many instances officials have, for political purposes, been known to give countenance and encouragement to them sub rosa. What has been attempted and accomplished in authorities as Mr. Gladstone and The Times, i is of course necessary to believe in this hitherto undiscovered people. We had imagined the only one Saladin was known to Syrian history, and that he was a sovereign, and a very great forth, we must endeavour to think of Saladins as types of nutional obivalry side by side with the cultured Moors of Spain and the mild Mamedans of India. We will do our best, bu with all our efforts we fear there will sometimes recur a dreadful suspicion that amidst the haze of distance and antiquity both these great authorities have confounded "the Saladins" with a people familiarly known to ordinary readers inder the name of Saracens. - Globe.

HORRIBLE OCCURRENCE WITH A

LION AT A RAILWAY STATION. A frightful scene-bas occurred at the Vaiso Railway Station, Lyons. A superb Nubian lion, intended for the Bidel Menageric, which had just arrived, was left in the station awaiting orders from its owners. The superintendent took the precaution of removing the track in which the animal was brought to Lyons into a corner off the line of the ordinary traffic, and dental approach of strangers. All these steps, however, afforded only a stimulant to the curiosity of some persons who happened to be in the station. Amongst them was a cattle merchant, who was seized with an insane desire to go up to the wild animal and caress it as he might do a cow or a sheep that he bad just purchased. He put his arm inside the cage for this purpose, but in another moment borrible ories were heard and attracted all the workmen and officials to the spot where the lion had been enfely placed out of the reach of doing harm to all but those who might wilfully seek danger. The sight presented was a frightful The inturisted animal had the limb of the adventurous oattle dealer between his teeth. and was drauging the whole body within the iron bars. When we add that the whole island is-itself a at anding geologic curiosity, and that in varied beauty and boldness of rock scenery it is unsurpassed even by the finest parts of the Cornish coast, we shall have said enough to justify those tourists who crowd the steamers plying twice a week between St. Peter Port and the little island. The result may be seen in the clean of adolescence is fairly reached the mind and thriving cottages that meet one everywhere, in the healthy faces of the children that troop along the lanes, and in the inscriptions of age on the headstones in the little churchyard. The island once supported a doctor, who was paid a fixed salary to reside there; but a few years back be was unbappily drowned in attempting to cross to Guernsey since been filled.

Sark is not overburdened with the appliances of a civilization beyond its needs. In one of the fields near "the green navel of the isle," a stordy farmer may be sometimes seen with his cout off doing a spell of work upon his land. This is the Seneschal of Sark -a Consul of the old Roman Republic with his fasces laid aside. It is not given to every one to behold this dignitary when he assumes his judicial functions and, scated in the parish school-room of Sark, adjudicates upon cases of drunkenness, minor assaults, and petty larcenies. Near this extemporized court house frowns the prison of Sark, at stone edifice about twenty feet feet square, which, under some pressure, might perhaps accommodate as many as half a dozen prisoners at a time. But Sark is happior even than and talks Spanish and a few words of English though there is, of course, no reason in the Republican Rome in beholding herself not only "uno contentam carcere," but unable even to fill its very small prison with malefactors. Its open door swings idly to and fro on its higes, and in the doorway lounges a blue-bloused peasant puffing lazily at his pipe. To the somewhat doubting question whether this really is the prison, he replies with a ready affirmative, but to the inquiry whether it contains any prisoners, he answers with a negative of almost indiguant surprise at the absurdity of the question. Such is the virtue of the island that the Seneschal of Sark appears to bear the sword in vaid. Civil jurisdiction her has none; and should two Sarkietes dispute over a small dobt they must go to the Royal Court at Guernsey, there to implead one another, But it is seldom, we suspect, that even these cases occur among this "bappy breed of men." too honest to defraud each other, and too industrious to waste time in litigation. Here they wear out their days—a hardy, frugal, I blameless race of peasants and fishermen, at peace with themselves and with one another: ing nothing to the inhabitants of the larger islands in those qualities which make the Guerusey peasantry one of the most kindly and courteous to strangers in the world.— Pall Mall Gazetie.
